

Every child's voice is an instrument that can inspire change

Za'atari Film Workshop

Za'atari Film Workshop is an initiative, co-sponsored by Voices of the Children and Save the Children, that included a 3-week filmmaking experience for Syrian refugee teens in the Za'atari Refugee Camp in Jordan. Using camera phones as their recording device, this workshop provided the basics of documentary filmmaking. The end result of the workshop is nine documentary shorts filmed entirely by the teens on a subject of their choosing. In addition, each film is scored independently by music composition students at McNally Smith College of Music in the USA.

The goal of this workshop is to teach the teens a medium through which they can share their stories with the world.

The films will premiere in the Za'atari Camp for the filmmakers and their families. They are packaged into one curated block and entered into targeted film festivals. The films will also be individually available online.

Voices of the Children is a nonprofit organization, based in the USA, focused on pairing teens world-wide in collaborative art projects to promote social and global awareness and create positive change.

For more information: www.votchildren.org